An Educators' Briefing

Regarding

Post-Secondary & Transition Programs

at colleges and universities for Youth with Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities

Since the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act (1998), there has been a movement to expand postsecondary and transition program options for youth with intellectual disabilities (ID) to within colleges and universities. College-based programs can offer a range of opportunities for youth with disabilities that include access to inclusive college classes with typically-enrolled peers, specialized instruction in foundational literacy/numeracy, integrated social and recreational activities and a wide range of adult age-appropriate vocational/career and independent living skills.

This complimentary workshop will consist of a guest lecture from Susan Colacello entitled --Fostering an Inclusive Mindset.-- as well as an --inside look-- into three of New Jersey's inclusive post-secondary/transition programs.
